Having a long-standing relationship with Branches, a local nonprofit, Palmer Trinity School recently helped more than 500 families, based in Florida City, who were in need of food.

The school donated fresh herbs and produce harvested from the school gardens and donated food from the cafeteria, which included frozen meats, snacks, fruits and vegetables, and eggs.

In addition, Palmer Trinity School launched a food drive for people in the community who want to safely drop off non-perishable items to help Florida City families.

"In a small way, we were able to help Branches at this critical time," said Patrick Roberts, head of school. "We will continue to answer the call to serve in the habit of heart and mind."

Scheck Hillel Community School

Scheck Hillel Community School's Noah Galsky participates in a virtual PK4 class that features live instruction and recorded content.

"School closures are never ideal, but this extension is the most prudent move, considering the wide-ranging community restrictions in place to combat the coronavirus outbreak," said M-DCPS Superintendent Alberto Carvalho. "We have been preparing for a worst-case scenario since early on, and I am confident that our students and their families, with the guidance of our fantastic teachers, will continue to successfully engage in distance learning."

TRANSITION TO ONLINE LEARNING

Scheck Hillel Community School, as other schools have done in South Florida due to the spread of the coronavirus, has transformed the school's academic program for more than 1,000 students into a virtual school.

"I want to thank our faculty and staff for working tirelessly to create a most meaningful educational experience, our parents for their partnership, and our students for their technological savvy, resilience, and smiles," said Vanessa Donaher, head of Scheck Hillel Community School. "As a Jewish day school, we have an ethical and moral responsibility to do our part in helping to stop the spread of this virus."

To keep screen time to a minimum, each grade level receives live instruction and recorded content that's readily available on a desktop or laptop, phone, tablet, or smart TV. For community service, students are visiting nursing homes through FaceTime chats, pre-recorded messages and virtual music performances.
